

Abstract

Methods for creating contention-free bursts of communications in an environment wherein a communications channel may be shared by a plurality of wireless networks. The methods presented also include mechanisms for recovery due to collisions and otherwise lost transmissions and for ensuring that a single wireless network is not able to obtain access of the communications channel at the expense of other wireless networks.